The Bimaaji'idiwin Producer Training Program is for community members of all skill levels that want to grow their own food or start a farming business. The program provides trainings, classes, workshops, demonstrations, technical assistance, organic seeds, educational materials, garden supplies, and access to equipment.

Participants will have the opportunity to engage in:

- Group meetings
- Local farm tours
- Regional organic & sustainable agricultural conferences
- Classes from February to October with experts on Agricultural business planning, soil health, seed starting and saving, pollinators, pest, disease and weed management, marketing, and produce safety.

At Gitigaaning or your own home, you'll learn about traditional and modern methods of cultivation and harvest and can complete a business plan to reach your goals. We help build connections with other producers and engage with USDA service programs and more.
